(U) Maryland – Guantanamo Prisoner Sentenced to 26-Years Could be Released Next Year

(U) Baltimore – A military jury imposed a sentence of 26-years Friday on a former Maryland man who admitted joining al-Qa'ida and has been held at the Guantanamo Bay detention center. But under a plea deal, the man could be released as soon as next year because of his cooperation with US authorities. The sentencing of Majid Khan, 41, is the culmination of the first trial by military commission for one of the 14 so-called high-value detainees who were sent to the US naval base in Cuba in 2006 after being held in a clandestine network of overseas CIA detention facilities and subjected to the harsh interrogation program developed in response to the 9/11 attacks. Khan, a citizen of Pakistan who came to the US in the 1990's and graduated from high school near Baltimore, earlier pleaded guilty to war crimes charges that included conspiracy and murder for his involvement in al-Qa'ida plots such as the deadly bombing of the J.W. Marriott hotel in Jakarta, Indonesia, in August 2003.
